Hiring Manager
Weights & Biases
San Francisco, California

Dear Hiring Manager,

I am writing to express my interest in the AI Engineer position at Weights & Biases, even though I don't have much experience or specific skills in the area of AI or machine learning. I have a background that includes extensive involvement in crafting intricate storylines in online role-playing games, which at best showcases my creativity but not technical proficiency.

While I understand that this role requires expertise in Python, JavaScript, and various AI technologies, I have primarily focused on using Microsoft Word and Excel for my documentation needs. My previous role involved managing a small team of volunteers in a non-profit organization where I coordinated community events. This experience has familiarized me with basic administrative tasks rather than technical or AI-related challenges.

I have occasionally dabbled in simple coding projects as a hobby, but my projects usually revolve around personal interests rather than enterprise-level solutions. For example, I once attempted to create a basic website for my personal blog but encountered issues with functionality that I couldn't resolve. Given this background, I realize I may not be fit for the more hands-on problem-solving that this position entails.

In conclusion, while I appreciate the innovations occurring in the AI field, I may not be the best candidate for this position at Weights & Biases. I look forward to possibly hearing back from you regarding this role.

Sincerely,
[Your Name]
